Background

Robert Payton trained at Newport Film School in documentary filmmaking and photojournalism in 1981 and 1982. In 1983 he joined the BBC Film Department at Ealing Studios, first being given the opportunity to work as a cameraman in 1988, aged 24. Robert took time off from employment at the BBC and worked as a freelance in Southern Africa, shooting documentaries for NBC and CBS, and also shooting and directing for TF1 France and NTV Tokyo. Robert resigned from the BBC late in 1991, and since then has worked as a Director of Photography and lighting cameraman across the breadth of programmes outlined in this CV. From the outset Robert developed a reputation as an excellent hand held cameraman, who was able to make a transition to lighting commercials and promos when required.

Work in commercials has been recognized on 3 award winning campaigns at the 1999 British Television Advertising Awards, to add to a similar award in 1998. Also in 1999 his work on Mac Donalds commercials was recognized as a Finalist for the prestigious BTAA Cinematography Award. And in 2001 received a D&AD award for his work on an anti domestic violence campaign.

Robert's experience divides equally between film and video. His flexible approach to visual styles and enthusiasm to embrace new techniques has enabled him to maintain clients across a broad spectrum of the industry, from highly stylised commercials for blue chip companies, to fly on the wall photography for factual television.

He has experience on all formats from super 35 through to super 8 on film, and HDTV 24p, digibeta, through to mini DV on videotape
